The Oregon SHARP Program

What is SHARP?

The Oregon OSHA Safety and Health Achievement Recognition Program (SHARP) recognizes employers that have implemented exemplary safety and health management systems. Acceptance into SHARP is a public acknowledgment by Oregon OSHA that a model safety and health program exists at the worksite and that safety is a company value.

Program Requirements

Oregon employers in business for more than one year are eligible to apply for SHARP. Employers that apply agree to the following:

- Strong management commitment to safety and health
- Meaningful employee involvement in every aspect of the safety and health management program
- A comprehensive consultation covering the entire worksite
- Correction of hazards at the worksite
- Notify Oregon OSHA Consultation before making changes that might affect safety or health at the site

SHARP employers must be committed to developing and implementing a safety and health management program that is sustained through the collaboration of employees and management.

SHARP Approval

- SHARP candidates must have a Days Away, Restricted or Transferred (DART) rate below the state industry average for their North American Industrial Classification System (NAICS) code.
- Oregon OSHA Consultation must verify that all SHARP requirements have been met before recommending a site for approval.
- SHARP approval is granted in 12 month increments. Recertification is granted only after verification that all SHARP requirements continue to be met.

Inspection Exemption

An employer that has been approved as SHARP for the second and subsequent years can be deferred from scheduled Oregon OSHA inspections.

Graduation

The Oregon SHARP program is a five-year program. Upon completion of the fifth year, employers are eligible to graduate from the program. SHARP graduates are encouraged to continuously improve their safety systems. SHARP graduate companies at fixed locations that wish to continue in a recognition program are encouraged to look into the Voluntary Protection Program (VPP), which recognizes outstanding accomplishments in occupational safety and health management.
